

Learn About Rare Disease Firsthand

The RARE Compassion Project matches eligible medical students with a rare disease patient or family, giving you an opportunity to personally learn more about:

- Rare disease diagnosis journeys
- Unique challenges faced daily by rare disease patients
- How to connect with the larger rare disease community

Applications for the RARE Compassion Project are accepted year-round and matches are made quarterly.

What to Expect

Global Genes will match you with a rare disease patient or family based on geographic distance. You will build a relationship with your match to better understand their challenges and day-to-day experiences through phone, email or in-person visits. Once matched, you will also be eligible to apply for the David R. Cox Scholarship. Additional student expectations include:

- Participation in a pre-program survey
- Introduce yourself to your match
- Actively engage with your match to learn more about their day-to-day life
- Work with your match to determine how long your engagement will last
- Treat your match with respect and courtesy
